ABERDEEN, S.D. (AP)—Quintuplets were born Saturday to Mrs. Andrew Fischer, the wife of an $80a-week shipping clerk who said he was pleased but "too tired to be nervous."

The five babies, four girls and a boy, were baptized and con-firmed Saturday afternoon by Cathalia Bishop Lambert Hoch. The bishop said the infants showed "lots of vitality" when he dabbed them with holy water.

The babies, born Saturday morning and about two months prematurely, appeared to be in good condition. Doctors said the first .72 hours would be the critical time of their lives.

WATCHING CLOSELY "The next few days are the most crucial," explained Dr. James Berbos, who delivered the babies. "We are watching them closely." Earlier he said the babies' chances "are good."

The father, 38, said be "shook" when he took his wife to the hospital Wednesday night and herned, for the first time, that quintuplets could be ex-

Bishop Hoch, from Sioux Falls S.D., reached into the babies isolettes to dah them twice with holy water-once for baptism, once for confirmation BISHOP'S PRIVILEGE born to their mother early

He said it is a bishop's privilege to confirm them at an early age. The habies' father watched the proceedings.

The five babies were placed in isolettes after their births between 1:58 and 3:01 a.m.

Isolettes are chambers in which oxygen, temperature and humidity are rigidly controlled. Messages, gifts and flowers poured into the northeastern South Dakota city from all over the nation. President Kennedy sent a telegram from Newport.

The quint's mother, 40, who has already borne five other children-four girls and a boywas reported resting well. STARTED CRYING

"About a half-hour after the doctor told her she could expect quintuplets," said her husband, she started crying and cried all night."

The other Fischer children are ages 3 to 7.

Fischer himself was a picture of weariness as he answered questions at St. Luke's Hospital.

He had been up all night. "I'm very pleased, but I need some rest," he said.

Fischer, a farmer, said he plans to stay in the nine-room rented house to which he moved his family a year ago "to keep the kids out of traffic." When will he go back to work?

Diversion Begins On Peace

HUDSON HOPE (CP)-Premier Bennett set off a hastily-placed charge of 71/2 tons of high explosives Saturday to start diversion of the Peace River.

Some 8,000 yards of rubble blew as high as 250 feet in the air after the premier pressed a red switch on a platform high above the multi-million dollar Peace River dam site.

As the smoke cleared, trickle of water could be seen flowing toward the three $16. 000,000 diversion tunnels completed only earlier in the day. STOP RIVER

A coffer dam that will stop the river and force it to flow through the tunnel will be com-pleted in 10 days, drying up half mile of river bed to permit

U.S. Moon Crew Facing 1,300 Orbits

WASHINGTON (UPI)-The American astronaut team will spend the equivalent of almost three months in weightless space flight around the earth before the epic U.S. try for a landing on the moon is made, space, agency official said

Saturday.

The 2,000 hours of orbital experience demonstrates the tremendous workload yet ahead for spacemen before a three-man Apolle team is shot toward the moon. There are hopes the attempt will be made it might not come until almost 1970.

President Kennedy has set a goal of an American landing on the moon in this decade. Space officials have supressed the belief that, barring major setbacks, an attempt might be made by 1968. * * *

In outlining generally the extensive preliminary flights leading to the lunar shot, an official of the National Areonautics and Space Administra-tion mentioned "late in this decade" as the possible time for

Addison Rothrock, associate director of plans and programs evaluation for NASA, said by the time the moon shot comes, the United States will have accumulated about 2,000 hours of manned flight in orbit.

So far, in four flights. American astronauts have been in orbit less than 531/2 hours. More than 34 hours of this was compiled by Gordon Cooper in his 22.9-orbit flight last May 15 and 16.

Rothrock said the 2,000 hours in space flight would include about 1,300 orbits. The total so far by four Americans who circled the globe in space is 34.9 orbits.

This means that the two-man Gemini and three-mar. Apollo flights—the advanced successor of programs to now-ended Mercury—will entail about 81 days of orbital flight.

Rothrock did not go into specifics about the forthcoming flights-the first of which is not expected until at least late next year as part of Gemini. But he said they would include rendezvous of spacecraft in orbit, transfer of men and materials from one vehicle to another and space manoeuvres. The Apollo moon landing plan as of now is to send three men to the vicinity of the moon, with a smaller craft detaching from the mother ship for a landing and then returning to the orbiting main vehicle.

The Soviet Union, U.S. officials insist, is still just as determined as ever to get to the moon ahead of America, despite contentions to the contrary by British scientist Bernard Lovell who recently met with Soviet

Putting the People Second

My wife Pat and I were on the streets of Kamloops today. Visiting door to door, speaking to neighbors and old friends, asking for their support in the election September 30.

I enjoy this kind of visiting, and only wish there was time to stay longer, or visit more often. I think it essential that a man in public service spend as much time as he can with the people he serves. When I am Premier, I'll make it a point to meet often with individual citizens, and the groups they form.

Since the time I was first elected to Parliament, I've met politicians who don't care about the people. I know those politicians are wrong. But even they don't disturb me as much as do the one or two really dangerous men who pretend to care about the people, but don't.

I think Mr. Bennett is one of those men. I've watched him for ten years. I've heard him say he's "for the little man." And time and time again I've seen him do things which hurt the little man. He has scared off industry, and cost us jobs. He has damaged education, and threatened the future of our children. His wild adventures with our money cost every taxpayer.

Time and time again he has sacrificed the ublic interest to his own appetite for publicity. He has put the people second.

I liked my work in Ottawa. We had achieved great reforms in my Department of Justice. And we were on the doorstep of great programs in my new department. But I couldn't sit by and watch Mr. Bennett use my province as his plaything. I have come back to stand up to Mr. Bennett. I will match my postive program against his publicity stunts, my able candidates against his rubber stamp ministers. We will give the people a choice.

Which is why Pat and I are knocking on the doors of Kamloops again.

Whistling in the Dark

RICHARD BOWER, Editor-in-Chief

TREE EUROPE'S outstanding wizard of economics Dr. Ludwig Erhard, who succeeds Dr. Konrad Adenauer as chancellor of West Germany next month, has given a strong indication that he will attempt to parsuade his European partners to reopen discussions os Britain's entry into the Common Market once he has assumed office.

The German economics minister, in fact, has always held staunchly to the point of view that the ECM can neither function efficiently nor attain its ultimate aim if Britain is not part of it.

Dr. Adenauer, on the other hand, has never been more than lukewarm on the subject of British participation, an attitude perhaps brought about partly by his own personal distilke and distrust of British officialdom and partly because of his inability to grasp the broad principles of international economic

It was doubtless fortunate for Western unity that Dr. Adenauer possessed this eigtached viewpoint at the time the recalcitrant General de Gaulle decided to et Britain's application for membership in the FICM. Had Dr. Erhard then been head of the West German government, it is highly unlikely he would have acquiesced as quietly and as quickly as did Dr. Adenauer to the French president's high-handed

The passage of time now permits the observation to be made that had President de Gaulle been met with any determined or practical opposition at that time it could easily have resulted in creating a wide and unbreachable rift between his government and the rest of Europe and both the free world's recovery program and security plans would have suffered.

As it was, Britain alone was the victim of his ill-will, but she was both big enough and mature enough to take the setback in her stride.

However it must not be supposed that the Macmillan government gave up either its hopes er its plans for entering the European economic union simply because de Gaulle slammed one door in its face. On the contrary, its chief ECM negotiator Mr. Edward Heath along with a number of his staff have kept up their pro-Common Market propaganda campaign throughout the length and breadth of the British Isles and far beyond.

Only recently one of his henchmen, Mr. John Tilney, under-secretary for Commonwealth relations, was strongly criticised during his goodwill tour of New Zealand, whose government has long been an opponent of the ECM, for speaking in favor of Britain's

Later in the same week Mr. Heath told a meeting of the Outer Seven (EFTA) group that the Common Market was still very much alive as far as Britain Will correspond.

There is little doubt that Mr. Macmillan and his pro-Common Market policy will be greatly strengthened by West German chancellor-elect's statement this week in which he said that Britain's failure to enter the ECM should not be considered a permanent

It may well be that plans are now being laid for another British assault on de Gaulle's economic fortrees of Europe. If West Germany under Dr. Erhard's government the Anglo-German team could bring subtantial pressure upon de Gaulle to change the tune he is presently calling for the Common Market Six.

But Mr. Macmillan and Dr. Erhard would be well advised to plan their strategy carefully against such a doughty foe. Nor must it be forgotten that any such move in the future would not necessarily be made with the full support of the British people. many of them, mindful of their own independence and the value of maintaining strong Commonwealth links, the ECM has lost much of its appeal.

Thus the two leaders may find that whistling in the dark provides little competition against de Gaulle's strident trumpet call.

A Thought

DURING 1963 the Canadian electorate has been called upon to exercise its right to vote considerably more than is usual in any single year. There been a national election, a spate of provincial elections and, of course, the normal flow of municipal elections.

All this is perhaps as it should be. Canadians have long been granted the democratic privilege of choosing their own governments at every level of public administration. And even though the privilege has been somewhat overused this year, the majority of voters would have it no other way

But as 1963 readles itself to go down in Canadian istory as the Year of the Politicians a new thought has been introduced into the country by the Fort Erie Latter-Review.

In its most recent issue this highly respected ekly journal raises the question of just how big a big business of government in Canada has become over the past few years.

It points out that statisticians of the Chase Manhattan Bank have discovered that there are now more civilian employees of U.S. governments—federal, state and local-than at any other time in that country's

The total, when the survey was made, was 9.50 million, or 13.5 per cent of the working population. Comparative figures for Canada are not available, the Review reports, but adds: "... there can be little doubt that they would reveal the same expan-ionary trend." Government departments and agencies (it says) which with a few exceptions earn no money, are not under the pressure of a profit-and-loss statement to keep their spending within bounds of what they can afford. They have little trouble in getting appropriations to increase their staffs whether the increases are either necessary or desirable. "The wage bill," the Review comments, "is met by the taxpayers who have no say about the necessity of the service to be

It is particularly appropriate that the Review hould raise this subject in the midst of British Columbia's provincial election when although each of the major parties has professed great interest in the province's future economic progress none has yet ed an economical government.

City Shows Clash -Is It Necessary?

Another of those seemingly unnecessary clashes of entertainment events which crop up so often here occurs Saturday, Sept. 28.

Talent-Capades and the Victoria folk fastival most head on, to say nothing of School for at the Studio Theatre and all the usual Saturday evening affairs.

But there is nothing at all is the evening of the previous Saturday, Sept. 21. The following unday, Out. 5, there is a clash between the plays Gigl, presented by the Theatre Guild, and ty Work at the Crossroads, performed by St. Luke's Players. Of course, continuing performances offer alternative nights for attendance but one - shot hows can run into a lot of actual trouble quite apart from the headaches occupit of so much competition on the night of their affair.

There is nothing like a long holiday to get renewed and find the old zest for life, particularly, it seems, if it includes two weeks in a small Austrian town, cold baths and a torrid twist session with your granddaughter. You can reed for yourself what it has done for Archie McKinnon, who just has to be one of the more-amazing 67-year-olds around. He never sounded better, or more interesting—

"Have had a wonderful trip to date, doing the usual things one does in London. Got to see the big track meet at White City between the USA and Britain. Big crowds at both "It was typical early-season football between the Spurs and Notts Forest—beautiful pattern plays spoiled by a poor pass, or could it be a clever interception? The shooting was not too good, powerful but high, but their speed amazed me. "It was a terrific game at Chelsea. It had everything—speed, ruggedness, penalty kicks, corners, beautiful combination play and simply marvellous goaltending. The two teams appeared to be in mid-season form and their stamina and speed were amazing. This 4-2-4 lineup looks good on defence but the four men keep backing up and will not make an aggressive move. They play cat-and-mouse, the man with the ball waiting for a defensive move and the defender afraid to make an aggressive defensive move. They push afraid to make an aggressive defensive move. They push or lob passes through the middle or a little to either side and the outside men tour in to blast the ball about a step ahead Canadian's Clutch Pitching "It is very exciting and it looks dangerous as everyone moves so suddenly and so fast. And they bring them down often by sliding tackles. The shooting in this game was much better than in the other one and it was so interesting that when the half-time whistle went I thought they had played only about 15 minutes. I sure hope to catch another game—

Discoloured Water

In order to carry out important maintenance work on the water distribution system it will be necessary to reroute water in many areas of the city, during the period Sept. 16-27 in-clusive. In view of the increased velocity of the water where smaller mains are used for main supply purposes it is possible that sedi-ment may be lifted and cause discoloration. Pressure may also be lower in some cases during peak demand periods.

If colour of water is important to you please watch out for this possibility from 16th to 27th September inclusive. Discoloured water, if any, will in any event be quite harmless for drinking Fire did an estimated $5,000 damage to the house of E. T. G. Simmons at 2124 Epworth, Oak Bay, yesterday.

Oak Bay firemen said the fire was mainly confined to the basement, the interior of which was mostly destroyed, but paint upstairs also was rulned. more than 10 days after a brewers' strike begins, a Victoria hotel man predicted last night.

William Pearce, president of the Victoria branch of the B.C. Hotel Association, said he expects all beverage rooms in Victoria and elsewhere in the province will fill up as much space as they legally can with beer in anticipation of the strike begins "even the non-drinkers will start to drink," he said. He said there are strict legal limits on the space in which any licensed premises may store beer.

Two Visits Planned By Fulton

By JACK FRY

B.C. Progressive Conservative leader Davie Fulton will fly to Victoria Tuesday to speak during a noon luncheon meeting of the Victoria Klwanis Club-but it is believed he is supposed to avoid the subject of politics.

Mr. Fulton is merely keeping an engagement which he accepted before the Sept. 30 provincial election was called by Premier Bennett on Aug. 22.

The politics will come afterwards, at a 1:30 p.m. pressonference in the Empress Hotel. Mr. Fulton will return to Vancouver the mme day because he is scheduled to speak at an evening raily in Squamish for Tory candidate.

A sterling opportunity

For abeer pride of possession, we know of nothing that can touch sterling silver flatwear. It's loved and treasured by women who own it... and longed for by those who don't... high up on their "most-wanted" lists... Here in Canada the proudest sterling flatwear carries the Birks name... That's why a sale, such as Birks are having right now, is in the nature of being an Event... in fact it's only the second such event in the whole of Birks' history... Briefly... all their sterling flatwear... in all 20 patterns... is being sold at a 20% 'reduction until the end of this month... A wonderful opportunity to start a set... or to add to the set you already have... at distinctly worth-while savings... Moreover, you can get serving pieces in every pattern... at the same discount... so if there are some pieces you don't have... and would like... now is the time!... And just to make it easier and not overstrain the budget... on any purchase of $15 or more, you may make a down payment of as little as $5... with subsequent payments of $5 per month... Finest value in Canada. we'd say... at Birks Jewellers, 706 Yates Street,

Tomorrow Sees New Era At Victoria University

July 1, 1963, will go down as a very special day in the history of British Columbia's capital city.

. It is the day the 61-year-old Victoria College officially became the University of Victoria and it is the day Victoria officially became a university town . . . With the birth of the new university many other "firsts" will be chronicled in its history . . . One such "first"—and the beginning of a new era—is the foreign student exchange program . . . a plan the students of the university originated, are administrating and largely paying for themselves.

Pictured on this page are the first two students registered at the University of Victoria under this program. They are Yuzo Tamai, 20, who is majoring in economics, having three years behind him in this field from the Keio University in Tokyo, and 22-year-old Kyoko Furuya, majoring in English literature. Miss Furuya, an expert in Ikebana flower arranging, also has three years to her credit in her major from Keio University.

Next year, the University of Victoria plans to send two Canadian students to Japan . . a program Yuzo and Kyoko will be eagerly awaiting.

Looking forward to starting lectures at the University of Victoria are foreign exchange students from Keio University, Kyoko Furuya and Yuzo Tamai, shown here with Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Hamilton, 2094 Quimper Street. Kyoko, who is a guest in the Hamilton household until next April, is in a beautiful kimono which is now worn in her native Japan for special occasions only. Yuzo is staying with Dr. and Mrs. J. C. M. Ogelsby of 2671 Margate, having first met Dr. Ogelsby when he was only nine years old. At that time Dr. Ogelsby, who now teaches history at the university, was with the U.S. Marines in Japan. He was teaching English and became acquainted with Yuzo's father, a professor of phil-post-basic bachelor of science degree in nursing. She also has to her credit a two-year post graduate course in operating-room technique from the Vancouver General, graduating in

First-year student Marilyn Rice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rice, West Saanich Road, has chosen physical education as her major. She

Registrations completed, these four freshmen discuss the ins and outs of campus life with second-year student Miss PNE, Linda Douma of Sidney, who is majoring in French and Spanish. At

Character Key Asset in Getting Along with People

What do you think is the most aportant asset for success in hooling, dating, career, travel, arriage? Is it ambition, car or social status?

They all may help, but the quality you're luckiest to have is character, according to the results of teen-age surveys, forums, research. Also according to school counsellors and couples who enjoy successful marriages. Why? Because friendship and love—grow with marriages. Why? Because friendship and love—grow with liking and respect for 'his and her' true character.

One attribute of the person with character is understanding of and respect for others. That is one reason why educators are advocating the study of anthropology for high school students. Anthropology is a study that belps you understand others' backgrounds and makes you more understanding.

For a quick survey of what anthropology can contribute to teen - agers, I lunched with Richard P. Gilson while he was visiting professor at the Uni-versity of Southern California.

Grassy Blacktop

GRASSY ASPIIALT—(A. L., Brentwood.) As I understand your letter, the grass is growing right up through your blacktop driveway, not merely seedlings ledged in cracks and crannes. In this case, insamuch as you can't get at the roots or the soil, you will have to use a systemic absorbed through the leaf pores of the blades of grass, taken into the plant's nd translocated to the roots,

About the best preparation for killing unwanted grass in this way is Dowpon, sometimes catalogued under the name Dalapon. Stick closely to the dosage recommended on the label, for if you put it on tee quickly, it will kill the top growth too quickly, before the foliage has a chance to pass the poison on down to the roots. If weeds other than grass are present, an addi-tional treatment with a 2.4-D weed-killer will be needed.

killer will be needed.

It may interest you to know that it is becoming common practice in England to spray a newly-seeded lawn with a thin layer of asphalt, and allow the grass to grow up through this

GRAVELLY SOIL -(B. R. S., Colwood.) I think you will be pleasantly surprised at what you can grow in that hungry, stony soil if you feed it with ripe compost or old, rotted manure and maintain a surface mulch of nawdust, straw or litter over the

of sawdust, straw or litter over the roots to conserve moisture.
Your plan for planting lilac, forsythia and Spanish broom is good. Some other subjects which should do particularly well under your well drained conditions are the California tree poppy, St. Jehn's wort, cistus, helianthemum, Afghanistan sage and heliasthemum. Afghanistan sage and rosemary. And how about trying some grapes? The most celebrated vine-yards of Europe are on leaner, more gravelly soil than yours.

PAMPAS GRASS-(J. S. O'M., Victoria.) Pampas grass is not pruned in the ordinary sense of the word, but the giant plumes may be cut for indoor winter decoration as soon as all the panicies have emerged. Dry them in the sun for three days, then arrange them on clean newspapers indoors until the stems are dry and

In early spring before new growth starts, heap a pile of wood shavings, excelsior or dry straw over the plant and touch a match to it. A quick flash fire like this does a much better cleanup job than anything you can do by hand. Avoid handling the leaves, as they have a saw-tooth edge that can give you a nasty cut,

The ugly spots on the skin of your apples are due to a fungus infection known as scab. This disease spends the winter on fallen leaves, and when these are wetted by rain in the spring, the microscopic disease spores are jet-propelled into the air, blasting off to an altitude of about a quarter of an inch, where the wind catches them and disperses them through the atmosphere. When one of these alights on an apple leaf—given suf-ficient moisture—the spore pushes a "root" into the tissues of the leaf, and infection besides. infection begins.

During the summer, the scab produces another type of spore which is not airborne but is carried off the leaf in drops of water. As each drop touches a developing apple, one of these brown scabs is formed.

Preventive treatment consists, first, of raking up and burning all the leaves from infected trees, together with any windfall apples, and spray-ing the tree thoroughly with a good fungicide such as captan, starting when the blossom buds are showing pink tips in the spring and repeating every 10 days for a total of four

It is all right to eat your scabby apples if you peel them first.

The blackest year for traffic deaths south of the Malahat—1962—is being surpassed by this year's deaths by more than 40 per cent.

Last year a dozen people had met death on the roads by the end of September. This year, with September only half over, the number is 17.

The only bright spot in these dark numbers is that most of last year's record 30 deaths came in the last three months of the year, so it is still pos-

ABERDEEN, S.D. (AP)—Quintuplets were born Saturday to Mrs. Andrew Fischer, the wife of an $80n-week shipping clerk who said he was pleased but "too tired to be nervous."

The five babies, four girls and a boy, were baptized and confirmed Saturday afternoon by Catholic Bishop Lambert Hoch. The bishop said the infants showed "lots of vitality" when he dabbed them with holy water. The babies, born Saturday morning and about two months prematurely, appeared to be in good condition. Doctors said the first 72 hours would be the critical time of their lives. WATCHING CLOSELY

"The next few days are the most crucial," explained Dr. James Berbos, who delivered the babies. "We are watching them closely." Earlier he said the thbies' nces "are good." The father, 38, said he 'shook" when he took his wife to the hospital Wednesday night and learned, for the first time, that quintuplets could be

BOATS, STAY CLEAR

All boats should keep clear of these savage visitors—they are black, with a white patch sometimes, and snowy white under parts.

There is a well-known story of a fisherman who shot at a killer up the coast, wounding it. The school turned on him and smashed his boat. He barely managed to climb onto the cliff ledge a few feet above

And there he stayed all night and next day, while the killer whales cruised up and down, just off the ledge, with every now and then a lunge out of the water to try to reach the frightened man. He was eventually rescued

This story is in the history of the killer whale and is be lieved to be authentic, though it was many years ago.

THRILLING SIGHT

Every year, about this time one or two killer whales visit these waters and it is a thrilling sight to hear and see them those long black dorsal fins as they cut through the water. And that is the time you know it is much safer to be on land

From the Sea, Tonic for the Soil

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

People have called him "The Kelptomaniac," and he is more than willing to acknowledge the title with a wide smile.

Martin Woodford, currently of 995 Greenridge Avenue, is a big, knowledgable, and boundlessly enthusiastic Englishmen who shas recently made the village of Sidney, together with a number of local farmers, gardeners, and prise-winning horticulturalists very happy by establishing a new industry in the vicinity.

It involves the use of seaweed as fertilizer, soil-conditioner, garden spray, compostactivator and plant food, and because of the myriad beneficial elements contained in this product of the outsity and the fact that the supply is enormous and rights on the doorstep, the potential for future development, says Mr. Woodford, is fantastic.

He has, too, the blessings of every branch of the booting fraternity. Scaweed, especially the feathery sort of stuff known as Jap weed abounds in these waters, and, fouling propellors and fishing-lines, is a continual source of annoyance and danger to all afloat. Martin Woodford, planning to harvest the weed in vast quantities just as fast as he can get organized and turn it into a useful land product, will be doing everybody a favor.

The idea itself, of course, is not new. For centuries people have known that seaweed, even in its raw form, which takes longer to become assimilated than the concentrates, makes good fertilizer. Sea-girt countries such as New England, Japan, China, Great Britain, France, and parts of Can-Great ada have used it for years. They knew, even long ago, that here were no weed seeds or disease spores. Now, increased knowledge the result of much experimentation — offers the world many more useful facts. Ottawa's extremely interesting booklet on "Marine Plant Resources of British Columbia (1961)" lists a tremendous variety of uses; for sea-weed, of which hair shampoos, forms of starch and sugar, alcohol motor fuel, uphoistery muffing. packing for log cabins, insulation material, fishing lines and certain grades of paper are only a few.

In different parts of the world the lowly weed has had from time to time, even more novel uses.

Sidney Welcomes New Industry

READILY SOLUBLE, the new fertilizer is poured into an irrigation poul at C. L. Myers' farm on West Sannich Road.

The heavier kelp, horn-like when dried, was employed as knife-handles. In the Orient other species were collected for use as a New Year's decoration, rather like holly. A crude barometer could be made from still another type—hung on the wall the plant's changes in color indicated certain imminent changes in the weather. And so on.

Start in Cuba

Martin Woodford, gardener, business executive, salesman, and, obviously, chemist, became inter exted in his present project largely by accident. He was born in Surrey, and left the Old Country when quite young to go and grow to-bacco in Cuba. He was highly successful at this, and became, as well, a managing director for an oil need development company in the Caribbean. He was there for 17 years, and seems' to have enjoyed both the tropics and his work. He has amusing tales to tell of the people and their easy-going ways. Transportation, he says, was primitive and frequently compilcated by a certain amount of involvement with 'amore.' He recalls a bus trip on a quaint little gus-run vehicle loaded with pessants, chickens, pigs, vegetables, during the course of which there came an unexplained halt literaly in the middle of nowhere. The bus driver, mysteriously disappeared, and though considerable time passed, of the passengers except

Martin seemed either surprised or impatient. Eventually it was emplained to him, quite cheerfully, that whenever the bus was a triffe ahead of schedule the driver libed to take a little time off at this particular spot to visit his lady lave. A smill farmhouse in the distance was pointed out. And the driver's complacent return to his duties, in due course, was the signal for a most interested discussion between all present upon the current status of the linison.

Infatuated

Another somewhat similar alfuation was one in which Martin sat in a train wondering why on earth it was so slow in getting under way. There came, several times, the usual series of hisses of escaping steam, but instead of these quickening and resulting in motion, nothing whatever happened. Investigating, the Englishman discovered a very levely young lady, fetchingly clad, standing nearby. Every native in sight, plus the engineer, was lost in admiration. And even when the train finally moved out and our man thought that at last he was on his the infatuated engineer simply couldn't bear it. He backed into the station once more for a last look - and started all over

When war broke out, Martin Woodford came to British Columbin and worked for the Royal Canadian Navy until cemation of hostilities, at which point he moved to Vancouver Island to live, under the impression that he was retired.

However, one can plainly see that this is a man with far too much vitality to lapse quietly into the middle fifties and do nothing with them. His enthusiastic gardening activities led him into contact with the internationally known horticultural laboratories at Onford, England, which were putting out a product made from seawed known as Alginure. The results he obtained from the use of this so impressed him that he began the series of correspondence with and long distance calls to Oxford's Professor C. W. Bonniksen, the 'father' of the industry, which have led to the establishment of the Sidney plant.

Some Doubters

As is the case with all new projects, he has run into a mass of problems, a gratifying amount of co-operation, and a certain amount of prejudice. Canada on the whole had not done much research in the seaweed field, and Ottawa was at first inclined to be a trifle off-hand. And the red tape involved didn't always seem to be wholly relevant—as witness official insistence on information regarding the number of his employees at a stage when, as he had already explained, the company consisted of himself alone. He finally filled in a form stating that he had two mermaids working for him—and heard so more of these.

Business quarters weren't easy to find, They had to be spacious enough for his machinery and storage, and adjacent to the sea, and he searched for some time hefore discovering his present becation, ideally only a few yards from the water's edge. And then, to start with, he had nothing but his idea, some blueprints, and the process formula from England, whose laboratory people were delighted to establish a connection here and to send him their basic compound from which he makes his prochasts.

his products,
"Which," he says, "should make
Mr. Bennett very happy, in view of the fact that he is urging more imports from the U.K."

Plant Takes Shape

One of the first things Martin Woodford did was to send a sample of the Jap weed which is so prolific here back to Oxford, to find out if it is as suitable for manufacturing purposes as is the different seaweed available off the coast of England. He was advised that it is every bit as good, so, as soon as facilities can be set up, harvesting will commence. And in the meantime the energetic proprietor works some 18 hours

"Que lindo!" ("How lovely!")

The pretty girl beckoned this susceptible male to the parcel wicket of Guayaquil's main post office with allure in her eyes, grabbed my son from my unsuspecting arms. Immediately the entire gaggle of her fellow female postal employees abandoned their posts, followed her and her prey, with delighted shrieks, into the labrynthian gloom of the cavernous back premises.

I knew Rory was happy, would accept the situation with the usual fatuous complacency he exhibits in the face of the adoration showered on him by the fanatically child - loving Ecuadorians. I was not. Ecuador forbids the importation of buby bottles, for reasons we have not discerned; but nobody bothered when Rory thrust his at the customs official's mouth.

PIONEER FRUIT MAN of OKANAGAN

Henry W. Corbitt should really be called "Mr. Kaleden."

He came to the country when Tom Ellis' cattle grased the hills before settlement began. He turned the first sod-perhaps it was the second-on the Kaleden Development irrigation system, and together with A. S. Hatfield (Inlander, Sept. 16, 1962) and Jim Harrison, planted the first fruit trees. Harry still lives at Kaleden where he harvests sunblushed fruit from some of the trees he planted in 1910.

Motorists scorching the pavement on their way north, from the junction where Highway 3 and 97 divide, see little of the tree-clad acres that slope eastward from the road to the shores of Skaha Lake, of the flower-garlanded orchard homes, or the turnoff that leads down to the village.

Kaledon from the Greek "kalos," beautiful, and coupled with biblical "Eden," was well chosen. Its luscious fruit and breathtaking vista across blue water to the gray-green hills beyond, is without peer in Okanagan.

When Corbitt left home in Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia. August, 1907, he left a seafaring tradition behind. His father and grahdfather had owned tugs and a filet of wind ships achooners, brigs and brigantines - which were sniled to the West Indies. South America and occasionally to the Old Country.

Soon after the turn of the century sail was on the wane. Steam had come to take the jobs away. So Harry turned his face westward, taking train to Vancouver. After a few days he crossed to Victoria, then to the Mainland again, Kamloops, Reveistoke, the Arrow Lakes, West Koote-nay and from there to Gilden, where he spent the winter working in a general store. During the winter he received a pamphlet describing opportunities in the Okanogan and when Harry reached Summerland in March, 1908, he bought 10 acres, planted to young trees, from James Ritchie of Pilot Mound, Manitoba, who developed, subdivided and provided irrigation for 320 acres of land at what it now West Summer-

Harry Corbitt's interest an fruit-growing may well have at moned from another ancestral tra-dition. Grandfather Corbitt had been interested and active in the apple business and in 1861 shipped the first apples from Nova Scotia to England. His brig, "Nova," William Smith England His brig, "Nova," William Smith master, loaded 2,000 barrels brought down the Annapolis River. This first venture was a suc cess but later shipments were not always profitable.

In May, 1909, Harry Corbitt recalls, a party drove down from Summerland, the Hatfields and Anguin families, the Hayes girls, George Christie, Jim Harrison and himself. They wanted to see Jim Ritchie's proposed development on the west shore of Skaha Lake it was called Dog Lake then—and to have a camping holiday.

Impressive Country

Driving south from Summerland along the benches where the Experimental Farm now stands they followed the present CPR right-of-way closely, fording Shingle Creek near the Indian church, and along Skaha Lake, camp-ing at the north end of the proposed townsite. For three days they enjoyed the kind of fishing one talks about, catching Kamloops trout seven pounds a grand holiday.

Actually the camping trip developed into much more than a holiday. What they saw induced the Hatfields, Jim Harrison and Harry Corbitt to cast their lot with the new development and, after returning to Summerland, Corbitt sold his young orchard.

During the fall, 1969, Jim Ritchie accepted a deposit of $50 from prospective buyers for each five acres wanted. The first man to make a deposit was granted first choice of acreage and Harry Corbitt was one of the first deposi-

Ditch-Diggers

With the beginning of work on the Kaleden irrigation system Jim Ritchie placed Harry Corbitt in charge of a 20-man ditch-digging crew preparatory to laying wood-stave pipe the following spring.

Scattered through the gang of local men were the bindle stiffs and odd-ball characters of the old west Among them one Peg-Leg, who had lost his leg below the knee. He were a wooden peg, notisted and strapped to the stump of what was left. A story was told that some years before, when out with his pals, he had partaken not winely but too well. On his way home to his shack in the early hours, singing lustily, his peg-leg slipped through a knot hole in the wooden sidewalk. At daylight he was still there, singing, with his peg stuck

Another character Harry remembers was "Three-fingered Scotty." The day he quit he approached smilingly to my "Good-bye, Boss. I will not embarrans you by offering to repay the money you lent me!"

Of such were these knights of the road,

Through the winter, 1909-10, a cold or Kaleden mail was picked up at Okanagan Falls. Since the lake was frozen they could skate down, Harry recalls. There were always plenty of volunteers and it was suggested, unkindly perhaps, that the post office being in the hotel had some attraction for mail-collecting volun-

Short Course

After winter put a stop to construction Harry Corbitt and Jim Harrison took a nineweek course in Horticulture at Washington State College at Pullman. Returning to Kaleden in the spring they undertook, in partner-ship with A. S. Hatfield, the care and planting 200 acres. First the land was cleared, ploughed and fenced, for this was still open range. Then came the job of planting, by hand, 27,000 trees, nursing them through the first summer and irrigating them, one by one, for many weeks, with water carried in a pail.

By 1913, fruit trees, planted in 1910, were beginning to bear and in early August the first commercial crop was picked. Sixtey seven crates of apricots the entire Kaleden cropwere packed and shipped from the Kaleden wharf consigned to the Scott Fruit Company at Winnipeg. It was a proud moment when the pack was loaded aboard Captain Hatfield's "Cygnet," but joy turned to dismay when the returns did not cover the cost of shipping and packing.

At spraying time, 1914, Harry Corbitt introduced the first horse-drawn aprayer, and even though pressure (125 pounds) was maintained only by strong arms, it had many advantages, together with speed and efficiency, over the small tank-type carried on wide shoulders.

The first apples shipped from Kaleden were grown by Harry Corbitt in 1914, another family first. He hauled box shooks from Penticion. engaged a Penticton Fruit Union man to do the packing, and 129 boxes of Jonathans were shipped to Penticton on Hatfield's new tunnelstern S.S. Mallard.

Soon after, war was declared in 1914, Heny joined the colors, entirted in the 214th Battalion, trained at Camp Hughes and went overseas with the rank of corporal. He was away from Canada for three years.

During the time Corporal Corbitt and other Kaleden men were overseas their orchards, 92 acres in all, were tended by F. W. King and George Robertson and, in spite of many diffi-culties, the "Tommies" returned to find their orchards in good shape.

Two Daughters

In 1924, Henry married Carolyn W. Viets of Diguy, Nova Scotia. The ceremony was performed in the original St. Saviour's Ranch Church built by pioneer settler and cattelman, Thomas Ellis, in 1892.

Harry's two daughters live nearby: Charlotte (Mrs. Mervin E Davis), with her husband and five children on 22 acres of Harry's original orehard, and Jane (Mrs. Ralph Phelps), her husband and two children, at Okanagan

Both girls were members of a small group to pioneer skiing in southern Okanagan. Jane compeled in the Canadian Championships at Banff in 1950 and Charlette won many trophies at Okanagan and Similkameen events.

In 1922 he was one of the first trustees of the new school district. Following the First World War he served two years as director of the Penticton Co-operative Growers, and when the Kaleden Co-operative was organized in 1923 Corbitt brought his experience to the new organization as director. He was trustee of the Water District for a number of years, secretary of the School Board for seven years and was also a Justice of the Peace.

In 1958 he wrote the "History of Kaleden" for the Centennial Committee, a 61-page booklet of historical importance.

At the moment Harry Corbitt is a director of the Penticton chapter of the Okanagan Historical Society where his interest and activity has done much towards the chapter's success And since 1939 he has served on the executive of the Penticton and District Red Cross. Still living at Kaleden-of today's residents, he was istrict—he has harvests rise from his 129 boxes of Jonathans in 1914 to nearly a quarter million crates of choice fruit in 1962.

In the Days of the Scow Brigades and the So-Called Railways

From some time in the eighties until 1916, transportation into the north from Edmonton was by a 100-mile freight road to Athabaska River, at The Landing. From The Landing brigades of scows brought freight through the rapids to Fort McMurray and stern-wheel steamers carried on to the Arctic by Mackensie River.

Running the rapids in the 40-foot scows was often exciting. Experienced guides picked out the channels, according to the condition of the river . . . flood or low water.

One section of this route was provided with the first railway in the north -pussing the Grand Rapids. This was on an island that divides the river there. It was a quarter of a mile long with wooden rails, and for rolling stock there was a push car. Those using it pushed it, in addition to repairing the rails and paying a freight rate that made it the most profitable railway in the world.

At most stages of the river, scows could be taken through the narrow cast channel with part loads. In 1914, when we reached Grand Rapids, the water level was so low that we had to push the heavy secons across the island on the railway tracks, heavily greased.

Then came the Alberta Great Waterways Railway. There were some had stretches of muskes to be crossed. At one place miles of right-of-way had been cleared, construction camps built and great stacks of baied hay provided which had to be abandoned because the stack of the construction of a more feasible route was needed. Probably few people know about this. I saw it where the base line crossed the cutting near an abandoned camp.

By 1916 construction permitted traffic to the vicinity of Fort McMurray, and the river route was abandoned. But it was not yet a good railway. A small flood, a storm or winter conditions interrupted its halting service ork trains of flat cars and mixed freight. For luxury, at its tall end, was a passenger coach marked "Grand Trunk Railway, Number 1." It was panelled with mahogany, seats covered with rich, red plush and brass lamps were suspended from the ceiling. As the tracks were rough the ancient wooden frames creaked like a sailing ship in a storm.

This year, 1916, I planned to bring my party north by this railway if possible. I interviewed the general manager in Edmonton who agreed to transport men and horses as far as possible. He also promised to send a train to pick us up at an agreed-on place, October 15.

First Train In

We left in early May by the first train of the season. Ties had been laid on the surface, unbalasted. Frost formed under them and in melting, the grade thawed under the rails but held in the centre under the tles. Where this occurred, the weight of the train broke the tle in half. Cars went off the track; but as we travelled slowly little harm was done. I was worried about my car of horses.

It did go off but did not overturn!

At meal-time we stopped where there was wood and water and each party cooked its own meal. A whistle from the engine announced that we were to continue on our way. From force of habit, the whistle was sounded for for moose and they stupidly would race along the track instead of leaving it . . . somewhat slowing us up.

The second day we reached Christian Rive

100 miles from Lac la Biche. There was a tem-porary bridge there and the train was stopped while the conductor and engineer went to examine it. It did not look sound. The spring ice had caused some movement.

The conductor announced, "Well boys, we'll wait till morning and see what happens." Next raing there was no bridge.

We built a ramp and unloaded our horses and supplies and continued by pack train to our work

Borrowed Transport

In mid-summer, I was obliged to make a trip to Edmonton. The packer brought me to the Christina station. There I found a Syrian free-trader and two half-breeds. They had been waiting a week for a train and had seen We found an old, dilapidated hand can on the siding there and decided to make our way on it. Grease had hardened, which made pumping heavy work, but with four men we could make about eight miles on hour. Late in the day we heard a train coming.

It was a work train which came to a stop when it reached us. The conductor was not pleased. He shouted, "Can any of you fellers talk English?"

We were in somewhat bedraggled work

The Syrian replied, "Me, I talk English."

From what we could see it had no brakes. As it turned out that didn't matter. In the coul of the night the grouse hardened till we could scarcely move it. From time to time we lit a fire underneath to melt it. We reached the big hill at Lac la Biche in the early dawn. We did not need brukes—or an ancher, as the conduciar had grimly proposed. We had to pump hard down the grade and parked our "pullman" on a siding—and forgot it. October 15, the date of our rendervous with the train at Christina "station" arrived. By

A Victoria Woman Remembers . . .

OLD KATIE LOVED

My Friend, Mrs. M, who lives in Victoria, but prefers anonymity, has, as I have said before, a quiet and capable air, that brackets her at first glance as either a registered nurse, a psychiatrist or a college teacher. Truth is, that as a wardress at California's one-time Tehachapi Prison for women, she had to be a bit of all three!

She was indocrinated to her new job in 1939, with these basic rules: to always have her keys on a chain around her neck, so that they dangled at pocket level and never, never part with them during a tour of duty; she was never to enter a prisoner's room alone no matter what the cause or occasion; and she was never to discuss personal affairs with the prisoners, or make contact with them after their release. From these basic tenets the rules rippled off in a variety of lesser edicts that became in time a matter of

Toughest assignment in the prison schedule, she tout me, was the intuntry detail, for not only was the machinery old and broken down, but in summer the outside temperature of around 100 meant it was 120 in the laundry. On which account tempers got frayed, old grudges came to light and fights were normal procedure. While some "accidentally" tore the prized possessions of their enemies (blaming the machinery), others stole soap or quietly "goofed off" in a mutinous mood.

"The Negro women showed up best under these conditions," Mrs. M. maintained, "Trey seemed to have better balance, a better sense of humor and were generally more co-opera-

Once, she told me, in the oven-like heat, a sandstorm struck, driving through every crack until and lay an inch deep on everything. The white girls were either crying, fighting or on the verge of mutiny, declaring further work impossible. It remained for the Negro girls to rally to leadership, and though few in number, they cleaned up the place and did the wash all over again.

"This wasn't in any spirit of subservience," said Mrs. M. "It was simply a challenge, and they met it—with wisecracies."

It was one of the colored girls whom Mrs. M. found weeping coolorsly near a porridge pot one morning.

"There's enough sait in that already," said Mrs. M. gently, as she passed, then asked what the trouble was.

"I, doan' get no letters from nobuddy — no letters at all." said Peark.

"Well, you must have some friends somewhere," urged Mrs. M. "Why don't you write them and maybe you'll get a letter back."

"I ain't got no friends. Miss M."

"Well, what a shout with bushed. Despit

"Well, what about your husband. Doesn't he ever write?

"Lawsy, Miss M, he pain't write," flashed Pearl' in eye-rolling astonishment, 'I killed

Divorce Mill

There was also a ray of humor in the case of Lottie, another resident of B cottage, who, on her husband's sudden ideath, was permitted by law to fill out the remainder of his term of office as a rural JP. She had performed quite a few marriages, when there came to her one day the sudden idea of "Instant divorce." She started outling the bonds of PART II matrimony for dissatisfied couples, at $5 per snip, until the law caught up with her, and Tenachapi was the final payotf.

She did however admit occasionally to one worry. Appears her clients wno remarried were creating quite a crop of illegitimate children!

A slight anomally was Mildred, a newly disbarred female attorney who arrived one day to do five years, slong with matching luggage and an air of superiority. Shown her cot in a dormitory, haughtily she refused it. She said the judge had told her she was going to Tehachapi because the mountain air would be good for her, where she would have a room to herself. Finally of course she had to settle for cot, but her attitude created no little interest among her room mates.

All would have gone well had she not one day made a dreadful blunder. She had been boasting about her friends in high places in state and civic governent, and finally remarked that she had even been head of the committee that chose the site for Tehachapi women's prison! It was naturally some little time before her room mates forgot that!

Frankie Arrives

Perhaps the most fantastic situation developed the day Frankie, the boy-girl, arrived at the mountain retreat to serve a term for dangerous driving.

Recollecting her (him?), Mrs. M said his sentence must have been at least a year.

His (her) history is briefly told. Born of well-to-do parents in the Middle West he was fundamentally a girl (and I'm sure that's the proper word) but somehow he never would wear girl's clothes - just tore 'em off. He always played as a boy with the boys and grew up a rangy, pleasant spoken youth, with a manly personality. He attended the University of Texas, undistinguished from thousands of other young men, and finally arrived in California to take an engineering course at UCLA. That summer he got a job chauffeuring a prominent state liquor official, who had con-trol of bonded warehouses. Unfortunately. trol of bonded warehouses. Unfortunately, soon after Frank was hired the official disappeared, and so did the contents of a warehous

Of course, there was a great to-do, but Frank declared he knew nothing of his employer's contacts or his friends, had never seen them, and noticed nothing untoward. Some time later, however, Frank had the misfortune to slam into a car one night. Although he stayed at the scene and rendered help (sole occupant of the other car suffered no injury) still it was adjudged that Frank was going too fast, and in addition had no California driver's licence. For dangerous driving he got a year in San Quentin.

It was there, after a fight with a pugnacious cell mate, that he was hospitalized and the discovery made that he was really a woman! Quick word to the convicting judge got the warrant of commitment changed from San Quentin to the women's rest paradise at Tehachapi.

"He will no longer be known as Frank or Frankie," was the Tehacapi superintendent's edict to her subordinates when he (she) arrived, adding, "from now on she'll be called

"It was a crazy sort of situation," said Mrs. M., "for he was obviously a man and he hated going around in a dress."

women prisoners, as they viewed sacks of flour that needed moving from a store room. "Wait till Frank—I mean Frances—comes in." When Frances appeared, she would shoulder them two at a time and walk off with them.

Although it was some comfort to Frances to wear overalls outside, like all the rest he had to shed them before a meal, and don a dress. He contented himself with rolling up the pant legs and wearing the dress on top. When he six at a table, he'd reverse his chair and straddle it, apparently to assert his masculinity. In his room wardresses found junk like cleaners and books on me ics, instead of the usual lipstick, and hair

"He was really a very nice young fellow," Mrs. M. recounted, "which of course added to

"How was that?" I asked, as if I didn't

"Well, in a group like that, every time Frances took a shower, there seemed to be a special interest in the washroom. In fact we had to have someone on duty there to see he didn't get attacked!"

Frances, however, formed no attachments, gave no trouble and when his time was up, through the interest of those who had observed him, saw a specialist and later had an opera-tion: the operation that determined once and for all that he was Frank and not Frances,

Mrs. M heard from him again, to learn how, after Pearl Harbar, he tried to join the U.S. Navy, but nome alight disability got him the 4-F rating. Undeterred he joined the Seaes, the Navy labor corps, and served in the South Pacific.

Then his letters suddenly coased.

Of all the mementos treasured in Mrs. M's ecraphook perhaps the most heart-staring con-cerned two women; women with perhaps op-posite beginnings, whose drug addiction finally took them down the same hard path, on which Tehachapi provide to be only a wayside stop.

One was Harriett, "Big Harry," with an "anything for lacks" complex. Despite her told humor and her drug addiction, nevertheless she was a living soul.

From her stray letters while on parole you sense her struggle to hold a job, first as an interior decorator, then as a hand in an air-oraft plant, then something else.

Trouble Hunter

"I never heard of a woman that got into so much trouble," Mus. M told me. "Always in some sort of a jam: She fought, too, not only on her own behalf, but often on bound of others. Once she best up a sailor in a bar."

I remembered what Mrs. M told me of how Big Harry wrested the knife from Diane b there was murder done in the laundry; and she related another incident in the same nerve-fraying department, when a hard-boiled and mutinous female nearly provoked a riot. Big Harry stopped it before it got started by striding up to wheer the cursing dissident out, sprending her arms, then in lightning style bringing her fists together with the woman's cars between! The recalcitrant one, so it's maid, suffered from ringing noises in her head for the rest of the afternoon.

"I never in all my life was so in carnest about trying to make good as I am now, but gosh! I can't seem to get ahead. Sometimes I wonder whether it's worth while trying to try!... then I think of that PLACE and decide to hang on a little league...

Admittedly she moved among a triminal element, for she wrote of mosting an eximmete:

"I wish you sould see her. My God! She's caten up with some sort of disease affecting her legs and arms. Her body is sort of fat . . . claims she isn't using "junk" and that her family is keeping her , , she flashed a roll of bifls. Afterwards all I could think of was how horrible she looked."

It was the writing on the wall for Harry. In roundabout fashion came news of her being jailed again (disorderly conduct). Then came a sanitarium for addicts.

"When next she wrote," said Mrs. M, "she had been 'in hospital, very ili' (which probably meant jail). Finally I heard, through the State Narcotics Division that she was hopelessly incurable."

"But she was tough," said Mrs. M. in retrospect. "And what a power for good she would have been if she had put some of her dynamic energy to work for good, instead of evil."

In running over the roster of cottage B, mention was made of old Kate. For these who are animal lovers, particularly those who like cats, her story will have singular polgnancy.

In Mr. Mr. scrapbok I had glamped a picture of Kate the Kate that the sound in the late Tr. Alone in her sudden winowinous amorphism found solace in the gustle friendship of three cats, which made their home with her in the top floor back room of a San Francisco buarding house. One day an irritable landindy kicked one of them off a top landing, and somebow the sight of it squirming in agony triggered passion in Kate's mind. In a francy of anger she killed the landindy and got a life sentence.

Her picture, as she looked then, and one of her dearest possessors and she gave to Mrs. M. when she left Tuhachapi. Old Kate wanted her to have R.

Katie went to San Quentin at first, to start the dreary round that was to know no end. Maybe they allowed her a cut for company; if so, it probably showed more interest in her than any of the parole board members who, year after year, decade after desain, turned down thoughts of release.

Mrs. M. reported for duty at Teachapi in 1939, old Katle was there. She had been in 40 years, and now at 75 was somewhat cref-chety, her invariable apithet for the young and misbehaving always a muttered "Beam!" Varminis!" Her close companions were a few prison cats, which she fed with kitchen scraps, or, if those weren't available, she saved her own meat to feed them.

The prison superintendent at that time (ultimately removed from office) was a hard-boiled, insensitive creature and also something

"Den't you know enough to stand up when I enter the room?" she once burked, as old Kette romained atting on her bed.

"I've got no respect for you," sid Katle was

"Well," said the superintendent with a tri-imphant glosm in her eye, "Then we'll have to get rid of some of these cats."

Sure enough, that night, on her instruction, came the echo of a couple of shots from autotic. As the slight diamning of gricen lights night signal an electrocution, the sound of the shot would bring momentary silence to even the loost imaginative.

Long after Mrs. M left Tetrachapi, she con-tinued to get an assagiant letter from old Katle, and I read some of them in the acrep-

Another letter started: "This marving you were the first thing I thought of on waking up. The wind is blowing furiously. I have just been out to feed the kittles. I have no little ores now, the last two, Dot and Dash, were taken away by one of the warders for her little daughter who is fond of kittens. I am so "I am very glad I spent my youth in the last generation . . . nowedays this is a rotten old world. Once again I have plenty of kitties to look after. Four little homeless ones wan-dared in from somewhere, all half-starved, I do without meat myself to feed them and they are very grateful . . . Do you remember how you used to let me down the back states to feed

Invariably old Katie's letters had a gruteful mention of Mrs. M's past bindenesses, thanks now and again for a few dollars some-which somehow ties in with Mrs. M's desire for anonymity in this story.

You some the end drawing nour for Katie as alse writes:

The tills how the "girls out hitty pistures at of the papure for me" and winds up in her melfied scrawl, "How I would have to see you pain—a lasty of the first quality."

Finally the letters betrayed a little mental andering but nevertheless she aposks of ing out in a hall storm (at $4!) "to see if any the little birds invo been injured."

Came ward finally, in December, 1948, that old Katie at 85, after 30 years in prison, had finally made parele!

"We found that she had gone to alcep quietly and peacefully," wrote the new super-intendent, "during the night of November

"The interest which you have led in her roughout these years," west on the letter, seemt a great deal to Kate. She was always opy to receive your letters and the pistures

My mother used to make a tomato soup when we were children that still occupies a front seat in my memory. Mother took it for granted that everyone could cook and consequently her recipes were very sketchy. I never did get a proper recipe. However, I do make a very good fac-simile of this lovely soup.

HERE IS HOW... Melt a plece of butter the size of an egg in the frying pan. Into this stir about ½ cup of chopped green onions, cook until neft but not brown. Use low heat. Now peel and cut up six large tumators. Use nice, ripe ones. Cut the pieces quite large. Put in a pan with the onion and cook gently The sice, ripe once. Cut the pieces quite large, Put in a pan with the onion and cook gently until just heated through. Season well with salt pepper and Tabasco. (Tabasco gives a lively lift to all tomato dishes). Add ½ tap, gweet hasil. Mix 2 thap, flour with 1 tap, ungar, thinned with a little water. Add to the tomato and onion. Now heat one quart milk. Add the tomatoes to the hot milk. Dun't get the milk too hot before adding the tomato mixture or it will curdle. Bring just to the near boil, but don't boil. Serve in bowle or large nous plates. Add a pat of butter and a large soup plates. Add a pat of butter and a aprinkle of chopped parsley.

CERLI SAUCE... Eight pounds ripe iomatoes, 3 pounds onlous, 1 head celery, 2 large green peppers, 6 large apples, 2 cups seedless raisins, 4 cups vinegar, 3 cups brown sugar, 1 cup white sugar, 1 seast tsp. cloves, 2 tsp. cinnamon, 1 thup, onlt, I tsp. ginger, 1 tsp. chili powder, 1 tsp. mustard seed, and Tabasco to your laste.

Peel and chop tomatous, onions and celery. Take the heaviest strings from the celery before chopping. Seed and chop the peppers; peel, core and chop the apples. Place these in a large kettle together with the vinegar and cook until apples and celery are softened. Add the balance of the ingredients with the exception of the raisins. Simmer, string often, until dark and thick, Add the raisins during the last half hour of cooking. I like to keep tenting when making reliabes. You I like to keep tasting when making relishes. You may not like as sweet a relish as I do so add sugar according to your own taste. You may not like a really hot relish so add the chill powder and Tabasce to your tasts. This quantity makes about 10 pints but the recipe can easily be halved. It takes about three hours slow simmering.

For my last recipe I will depart from the tomato theme. In response to several requests I give you a recipe for small, white pickled onlons.

It was a Romantic and Sentimental Age

Who was Tem Wild? We'll never know—any more than the people of Victoria knew in the autumn of 1884.

Victorians, I would say, wept when they learned about poor Tom Wild, a lonely sailor, far from home, who had, apparently, led a wicked past. But he had a heart of gold and he loved his mother and his father.

If they could have learned of his past Victorians, I suppose, would have been more content.

The Colonist led the tear parade for Tom Wild, in these heart stirring words: "The instances recorded are few of mea who have, previous to their own dissolution, written their own eptuphs, the generality of mankind preferring to leave eulogy of their merits to friends, not thinking highly enough of their own individual goodness to allow of their being egotistical in this respect

"Yesterday there died in one of the city hotels an American saflor named Thomas Wild, who was left in charge of the U.S. consul here by an American ship. He suffered from heart disease, from the effects of which he died, Wild was an eccentric fellow and had good family connections.

"He kept very much alone, and the reason for his following the life of a common sailor is known only to himself.

"The following epitaph was found among his effects, as were also a number of other shart pieces, he evidently having a genius for physing." MY EPITAPH—TOM WILD
"My history none on earth will rend,

"My history none on earth will read
"Tis one of crime and sorrow;
But may the Judge of all me speed
When I rise again tomorrow.

No: the history none will understand Of my life e'er I resigned it; The written above by a Henvenly hand, The Encording Angel signed it."

This caused tears esough, I would say, and I would think there were more tears when Colonist subscribers read "Farewell Lines to My Father and Mother."

"To father good and mother dear,
I waft a parting kins.
And may the light shine on their paths,
Those paths to Heavenly blim.

And if it please Almighty God We never nguln should meet I've still rich consulation left, Their love and memory sweet."

The Colonist closed the life story of Tom Wild with these words: "There is, without doubt, a sad history in connection with this man who will be buried in a lonely land, far from parents whom he still loved and cherished, amid what would seem from his written thoughts, a life of sin and sorrow."

It was a sentimental age, the 1880's. Tears flowed freely. The newspapers wept about any cruelty to animals, and people flew into storm if a small boy should throw a stone at a dog. Dog owners then, as now, were somewhat unreasonable people, wanting to thrust their pets upon others.

No sooner had Victorians stopped weeping for poor Tom Wild than they were indignant with some nasty person who was harming dogs in the town. No matter if the dogs were noisy, dirty and dangerous. It was not fashionable to prefer to live without dogs. One may imagine the tongue-wagging that

One may imagine the tongue-wagging that went on when The Victoria Standard had this to say:

"THE DOG POISONER — This fiend is abroad again. Mr. Miles, the butcher, has lost a splendid and intellectual dog, worth in work four men on horseback for driving sheep.

"And now Mr. Waiter Chambers has lost the prettiest dog in town—'Queen'—a plum pudding dog, known to ali, kind and faithful.

"What can there be more dastardly than to

"The dog poisoner is little worse in motive than the poisoner of men."

It was the age, too, of the romantic clope ment. The Colonist created a great mystery by telling of "a romance" in this way:

"A few weeks ago a young gentleman arrived from England and became enamoured of a young lady whose native place is Victoria. The young gentleman is not a British Columbian, strictly speaking, but he 'loved my Kate' and fain would take her to some place of sweet seclusion.

Thirter the couple went, with the sweet flowers of nature for twining around them; but their cup of bliss was upset when the Lothario was informed that the law of the land does not permit one man to marry more than one wife.

"It was too sad to break up the picnic party, but the law had its course and hence the felicity of the parties was disturbed. The loving revain was captured by friends on Jackass Mountain and the sweetness of matrimony was thus apprahended."

Victoria was a small place in those days, and so I suppose the names of "the loving twain" were soon spread abroad. However, that does not satisfy the curiosity of those of us who in this day and age go poking through old newspapers.

I was amused to read of the "face-lifters" of those days. There were none of those in Victoria, but Victorians were evidently much interested in preserving their youth for The

"I can take a worn-out bachelor, aged 50 years, and in three months have him youthful looking said a 'face galvanizer' to a Mail and Express chronicler of things strange and peculiar,

"'Let me tell you about it,' said the modern Ninon de l'Enclos. 'You must know that with age the muscles and veins contract. Contraction is also caused by trouble and grief. Look at the Wall Street men, or those who have been deceived in love. Then look at those who never know care. Their happy hearts are mirrored on their smiling faces.

"Amiability is a great preserver of youthful appearance, but the appliance of art can do much more. Do you know the cause of crows' feet under women's eyes? — I mean young women. Well, I will tell you they cry too much; when a woman cannot get a new spring hat, or is vexed about some other trifle, such as disappointment in love, she has a good cry. If ladies knew this caused the face to wrinkle there would be less crying in the

This advice about the danger of tears to the female face was wasted, no doubt, and if I'm to believe all I'm told there are still women who find "a good cry" frees the soul of frustrations and the heart of hatreds. I take it modern creams and oils remove the crows' feet.

It came as a surprise to me to learn that, in 1884, Victoria had marriage counselling. We lock upon that as something entirely modern. Not at all!

Not at all!

Here's a note in The Colonist: "PROF. McDONALD—Philharmonic Hall was well filled by the ladies of the city to listen to Prof. McDonald's lecture devoted especially to females. It contained some mound advice as to taking care of their own health, that of their children and generally how to make homes happy.

"Prof. McDonald also showed the effects of dissipation and irregular habits are visited on the offspring."

What, nothing about working mothers? Not a word. Working mothers were unheard of in those days, unless the lady was a poor widow and had to scrub floors to keep body and soul together. No melf-respecting husband in those days would dream of letting his wife work outside the home. That thing called togethers had not been hore.

getherness had not been born.

And so, as I hope you may gather, I had a fine time in the newspapers of 1884. But I shall never know anything more about Tom Wild, and I'll never know the names of the two who went to Jackass Mountain, and I suspect that Prof. McDonald was a fake.

However, I think these bits and pieces of history are important. Without them no true history of Victoria will ever be written.

TRAVEL WAS TOUGH

As in the spring we had our pack train, so, Heil, we set out along the grade, jumping windfalls, fording streams where the horses could not walk the ties. When I reached Edmonton I went to see the general manager of the Alberta Great Waterways Railway and recalled the agreement on the rendezvous of October 15. He smiled grimly and said, "That was the least of our troubles."

I think that it was next year that I was travelling to Fort McMurray by what had been called "The Muskeg Special." There was even a kind of pullman attached. We still advanced with caution. An excited woman one morning marched the car crying, "Where is Bobby." He was nowhere to be seen, even the conductor could not find him. He stopped the train and signalled, "Back up." Some five miles back . . . there was Bobby, manfully hitting the ties, heading in the wrong direction . . . heading for home!

The railway descended into Clearwater Valley at McMurray by Hangingstone Creek, with a steep grade. Sometimes the flood washed out the track and always the locomotive almost blew out the safety valves climbing out of the valley. At least on one occasion, in the early days, when I was a passenger, we were requested to get out and push! I remember among the passengers were two nuns. They did their bit shoving that train up the hill.

In 1921 there was a number of government parties working in the North and all headed homeward at the same time. The last boat from Fitzgerald to McMurray, which had accommodation for a dozen passengers, was loaded to the "gunnels." Cabins, dining saloon, dock space... all were crowded. The ship struggled upstream but eight miles below McMurray had to give up. This was Saturday, train day. I went ahead with a light canoe and wired the general manager of the Alberta Great Waterways Railway in Edmonton... "Please hold train for large government party."

In reply . . . "Will hold till Saturday mid-

This called for much action. Men and guar had to be moved by came the eight miles to Fort McMurray and also 20 miles up the Clearwater River by power scow, thence by wagon up the Hangingstone Creek hill. On my way back to the ship, I met Bishop Brenat and two members of his staff on their way to the Fort in one of my cances. I hated to do it, but I had to explain to the bishop that I must have my cance to bring my men to catch the train. He, as always, took it in good spirit but his companions were furious at the indignity of leaving Monsigneur stranded on the muddy beach waiting for transport to be sent from McMurray.

However, all our efforts were in vain. We brought our parties to McMurray by canoe and up Clearwater to Waterways. Horses were waiting to bring us up the steep hill by Hangingstone Creek to the railway terminus which we reached at 1 a.m. but the train had left—

We had two days' wait for the next train. There was a hotel of sorts at Waterways, the river landing where we put up. The next night I was awakened by the smell of smoke. Downstairs I found the proprietor attempting to put out a fire in the bar. The hotel was a flimsy, wooden structure. Almost at once the fire was out of control. We spread the alarm and all but one of the guests was evacuated by the stairs . . . the last had to be brought to safety by a ladder. Already the building was a mass of flames.

In time the Muskeg Special became more respectable, but the airplane had arrived and provided rapid passenger service to the North. The Athabaska Brigade was forgotten. Only the ice of springtime and the drift carried by the flood passed down the rapids of the Athabaska. Roads replaced the old pack trails and villages grew up at the sidings of yesterday—like the settlement of Behan, on Behan Lake. Bill Behan was my cook on the base line survey.

siding grow into a village.

I have since flown to McMurray a number of times and it was with a feeling of nostalgia that I saw the changes that time, with railway and airway, has wrought, especially to Fort McMurray. The skeepy little settlement of Brigade days... Tom Carr with his log 'fort' with the sign, 'Hudson's Bay Ca,' Bill and Christina Gordon, free-traders, Christina usually in charge while Bill was outside securing the new outfit and leaving for the North so late that he was frozen in somewhere along the way... and the Indian teepees (these were still being used) giving a touch of romance to this picturesque flat where Clearwater River, formerly travelled by the Churchill Brigade, enters Athabaska River.

Progress is often ruthless in its advance in obliterating what was interesting in the old days when developing new resources and introducing the techniques of modern living.

There was Strict Ceremony in the Indians' Adventure

by DOUGLAS LEECHMAN

"If young man not go in war party, everybody say 'You bad young man. Why you not defend your tribe?' Girls never look at him. Nobody invite him to feast. But if he go out in war party, strike many enemies, wear honor marks, wear war eagle feathers in hair, then everybody say 'That good young man. When he go to feast, everybody make him welcome; if he speak in council, everybody listen; when he go through village, all girls smile on him and he marry anyone he want."

So said Black Hawk, an old Hidatsa chief.

If there is one thing about our North Amer-ican Indiana that everyhody knows, it is that they wear feathers in their hair—or did, at any rate. Among the tribes that pushed this custom to the limit were the semple of our own Canadish prairies, the Blackflot, the Cree, and others. They were specialists in feathers and put those of many different birds to various

Among the most highly valued were the 12 tail feathers of the "war on the." This is not a distinct species of eagle but the young golden eagle, which has tall feathers of a pure white, except for a jet black tip. The more white it shows and the less black the setter the feather.

One Indian set the going price of a good set of tail feathers at one horse, but another man and he managed to get a le more than that by shrewd swapping and horse trading.

These feathers were worn as marks of dis tinction. Among the Pillager Chipewas, for instance, a man who had sulped an enemy was allowed to wear two eigle tail feathers in his hair; and if he brough a wounded prisoner in, he could up it to five

Feathers cut and arrange in certain ways had special significance, and showed that the man wno wore them was a railant fighter in war and a most accomplished thief in horse-stealing expeditions. War parties and raids on the enemy's horses were the principal pre-occupation of these people, once the necessary securing of food and shelter had been attended to, and the feathers were, in a way, a method of keoping score. A warrior shield, his warbonnet, his coup-stick, might all be decorated with these highly valued fauthers and none other would do. It reminds the a bit of a Boy Scottle profitiency thad are Scout's proficiency badges,

Eagle Trapping

With thousands of Prairie Indian warriors wanting these feathers, the demand could easily exceed the supply. Shooting an eagle with mand could easa bow and arrow is almost out of the question for these huge burds seldom me within bow shot and are extremely cauticus and wary The problem of securing the needed feathers was solved by the dangerous and difficult method of engle trapping an we can tell by the ritual and ceremonles that surround the trapping that it must have evolved over the course of many centuries.

To detail all the events of n eagle trapping expedition would take man pages and w have also to remember that t e rituals varied. as did also the techniques, from tribe to tribe and from generation to general trapped in the spring, other tion. Some people enever they felt or early winter, still others w like it. Other tribes, such a River Indians in the interior our Thompson of B.C., didn't trap engies at all; instead the took the young birds from the nest and brought them up in captivity, taking the feathers when they were ready to moult or when they tappened to want them. They grew in again later.

Any man who wanted to could trap eagles. A young man might may to a friend that he felt like going after feathers and ask him to come along. Others would lear of the pro-posed nunt and ask to come too. A typical party was made up of six men. They would leave the main village carryin, some preserved food and their hows and arrows or, later, rifles These were to enable them o shoot rabbits for eagle bait and to get fres 1 food, too, if it, happened their wav.

Having arrived at the bluffs where they were to set their traps, they first erected a fairly substantial conical lodge, for they expected to be here for some days. There would be a fireplace in the middle and a bed of sage brush along one side. Sage was held as almost sacred and played a large part in the rituals.

Once the shelter at the base camp was finished, the men proceeded to the erection of a sweat bath, near a lake or stream, as a rule. It was a dome shaped little hut, just hig enough to hold ail six of them and covered with skins or, more recently, with blankets. A fire was built just outside in which they heated stones a bit bigger than a man's fist. When these were quite hot, they were rolled into the sweat dee with green sticks. The men, all stripped to the skin, crawled in, and then water was sprinkled on the hot stones by the oldest man among them. Dense clouds of hot steam arose and the men prayed and sang sacred songs as they sweated profusely. Then they all ran down to the water and plunged in. If there was no water near, they dried themselves with bundles of the sacred sage,

Once a man was purified by the sweat bath, he was not allowed to touch his face or any part of his body with his hands. If he symply must scratch himself, he used a short pointed stick to do it with. Just before sunset, each man had the outline of an eagle painted on his hare back in red other. Then they had their evening meal and retired for the night, sleeping on the bed of sage.

Pit Sites

The next morning was the time to choose a site for the digging of each man's pit. As a rule, it was near the edge of a high bluff, with a clear flight path to the west. If the pit was dug right on the edge of the bluff, it would eatch no eagles: it had to be about five yards back from the edge. There were many factors that had to be considered, such as the local topography, the prevailing wind, and, of course whether the area was actually frequented by

When each man had made his choice, they all returned to their lodge to get food and water and then went back in a group to dig the pits, walking abreast and singing as they went. They dug all the pits as a group, all six working on each pit in turn till they were all done. The size and shape of a pit seems to have been pretty much a matter of individual preference, as long as it was big enough for a man to lie down in. Most of them were about five feet long, three wide and three deep. The work was done with stone hoes and digging sticks. These were about two inches thick and 18 inches long, with a chisel edge that had been soaked in grease and scorched in the fire to harden it. The earth from the pit was piled on a hide or a blanket and carried some distance away before being dumped over the edge of the bluff. No trace of any disturbance must be allowed to make the eagles suspicious.

Pit Covers

When all the pits had been dug, covers must be made for them. These were of willow saplings about six feet long and an inch thick Three of them were laid side by side about a foot apart and buckbrush was lashed to them so as to make a light screen. Narrow shallow to fit close to the ground. Loose grass and leaves were sentlered over the cover and the pit was now ready for the bait.

This was a large piece of red meat, or a rabbit, or sometimes merely a stuffed rabbit skin. If a stuffed skin was used, it had to be stuffed with something that wouldn't make a noise when touched. Dry grass, for example, wouldn't do at all, for the bird would know at once that something was wrong. Dead rabbits don't make a noise! Very often the piece of meat was tied to an actual or stuffed rabbit. This made it look as if another eagle had already struck the rabbit, forn it open, and had then been disturbed and had left. They even went to the length of putting a few drops of blood on the dead beast's nose to make it look like a recent kill.

Now that all the pits were dug, covered, and baited, the men went back to camp, get more food and water and, if there was a west wind blowing for eagles land upwind would prepare to spend the day in the pits. Often they took several things into the pit with them as well as their supplies. Some of the Blackfoot Indians took in a human skull for good luck; others preferred strangely shaped stones, a sacred snare, or some other charm. Another more practical article was a long, thin stick which was used to poke at inquisitive little birds, especially magpies, which would fly off with oits of the bait if they could. To foll them, some eagle trappers used a piece of lung instead of red meat as bait because the tissue is tougher and the magpies can't tear bits off it.

Pit Ritual

The ritual way to enter the pit is from the end, lifting the cover and sliding under it. The man must lie on his back, with his head to the south. In this position he can look up through the loosely-woven cover and see any eagle flying overhead. Some men put the bait in or near the middle of the screen, others on the west edge of the pit, in which case it was pegged down firmly so that it could not be carried off.

Sometimes an eagle, attracted by the baft, would circle again and again before coming lower down to look it over. When he did this the hunter would give the bait a little twitch, as if it were seriously hurt but still alive. This cautious circling and hesitating would sometimes go on for as long as half an hour, but when the eagle did strike, it struck hard and

Fast Action

With only seconds to work in, the hunter must jump up and grasp the eagle by the legs. Tucked in his belt, he carried a soft leather thong, half an inch wide and perhaps five feet long with which he tied the birds legs together and then passed the other end up over the wings. Lashed up like this, the eagle was helpless, but before the lashing was accomplished he would put up a terrific fight. The men wore thick leather gloves and sleeves to protect their hands and arms. The eagle's talons are very strong and sharp and, once locked e loosened even though the bird be dead unless the tendon in the leg that controls them is bitten through or cut. The man was protected to some extent by the cover of his pit, but even so it was a daring and dangerous hunt, usually successful,

In some tribes, once the engle's legs were bound, the bird was strangled while preming bound, the bird was strangled while preming down on its breast with the knue. The engle trapper prayed to the spirits when he did this, weeping bitterly, and asking forgiveness for "putting the eagle to sleep." If he was slow or clumsy in killing his captive, he would be accused of its "murder."

At the end of the day, those who had taken eagles wrapped themselves in mge to protect themselves from the engles' "power" and carried them back to camp, singing as they went, Here the dead birds were hung on a rack their feet tied to it, and their heads a few inches off the ground. Here they hung till the end of the expedition.

When everybody was satisfied, they would return to their village. First, another sweat hath to remove the "power" and to purify themselves, then the march back home where they arrived walking abreast and again slinging os they came. The angles, all wrapped in sages, were stuny came. The angles, all wrapped in sages, were stuny on a rack again. Some hunters took the feathers at once but others waited four days, four being a succed number. There was quite a brack to pulling them out. It took a pulling them out a took as the section of t little jerk, and a clumsy man might easily ruin them by breaking the shafts.

After the 12 tail feathers were pulled out, and if the wings and down and talons were not wanted, the bird was returned to the pit where it had been killed and laid in the bottom together with the rabbitskin lure. The bird was placed on its back, its head to the west, and tobacco was sprinkled over it. is sacred, too. Then stones were piled over the body and the pit was filled in. A ring about 30 feet across was made of large stones to show that this was a holy place. It is probable that many of the "tipi rings' found on the edge of a blaff, a place quite unsuitable for a samp, are in reality old, filled-in eagle traps.

People of tribes who did not kill the eagles they trapped took them back to camp and pulled the feathers from the living bird and then released is to grow now feathers. This then released it to grow new fanthers. This at least did not diminish the number of eagles, which seem to have been much more abundant in those days than they are now.

Not only the tail feathers were in demand. The wings were used to make fans, the talens as ornaments and analets, and the large, hollow wing bone was used to make coremonial whistes. All these things are fast disappearing and eagle trapping has not been practised as far as we know since about 1890. Nowadays, among the Dakotas, if they shoot an eagle with a rifle, they still wrap it in sage and bury it with a little tobacco, but not necessarily at the spot where it was shot.

$50,000-Bill One of Rich Collection

Ronald A. Greene

It isn't very often people are able to view a $50,000 bank note.

But there it was, the authentic material, at the annual convention of the Canadian Numismatic Association in Vancouver.

Along with it was shown the valuable and rare $20 B.C. gold piece.

The Bank of Canada had presented an unusual display, including the $50,000 note. which, however, have only been used for the transfer of money between the banks and the federal government. In fact, it's illegal for a private citizen to own.

A collector from the eastern United States showed his rare Canadian pieces, mint sets of 1908 (the first coinage from Ottawa), 1911, 1921 (a set recently sold for $12,000), 1937, 1936 (with the dots), tthe B.C. $20 gold piece and a B.C. $10 piece in silver.

Those attending also saw the gold and silver from the collection of the B.C. Provincial Archives.

Unfortunately advance publicity of the showing of the latter pieces was not allowed for security

Willard Ireland, chief archivist, spoke on B.C.'s most famous contribution to numisimatica. He gave a short background of the pieces and attempted to kill a few myths.

The first myth that is commonly believed is that the design was not approved: the second that the coins were not approved by London officials because coinage was the prerogative of the crown. As to first, the London officials had no objections to the design or any device used in it. However, these officials did express the view that the pieces were too heavy. Secondly, it was Governor Sir James Douglas' decision alone that the pieces were not produced in quantity and released. His decision was probably due to the troubles he was having with the mint and amay office employees.

Another invitational exhibit featured the paper money of B.C.'s chartered banks. This exhibit showed proofs which are printed on one side only-of the Bank of Vancouver paper whose four-year existence ended in 1914,

There were notes of the Bank of British Columbia which was absorbed by the Canadian Bank of Commerce in 1901, and notes of Commerce in 1901, and notes of the Bank of British North America. The latter recall the MacBonald & Co. Bank robbery of September 22, 1864, in Victoria, for there were $10,000 in Bank of BNA notes in the $30,000 loot.

The Daily Colonist, Su

The story of nickel—whether from out of the sky in the long ago, or from out of the earth in the more prosaic present—is told in a new book with the deceptively simple title of Nickel: An Historical Review.

It is written by F. B. Howald-White, who has spent more than 40 years in the industry, and it tells how through the a es the motal, whether accidentally or knowing y, has been a strengthener of man's weapons and implements.

From perhaps as long ago as 5,000 years, certain areas became renowned for their relatively tough metals, and surviving artifacts indicate that the secret was niskel, which happened to be a part of the ores of the region concerned.

Meteorites, too, apparently were an early source of iron with nickel content, and a likely origin for stories of magic weapons from the heavens.

The metal came on the mode in stage, however, under a cloud. German miners of the early 16th century found an one that looked like copper but contained no copper. Because of its fume-emitting qualities the disappointed miners credited it to "Old Nick." and from this came the name kupter nickel or, roughly, devil's copper.

PLATING FOR CUTLERY

The story from then on, especially from the mid-18th century, is principally one of curious and persistent chemiats, metallurgists and industrialists who successively identified thre metal as a chemical element; solved the difficulties of separating it from its ores; developed processes for economic production, and found increasing uses for it.

Around 1825 it came into use in alloys for knife and fork handles, candle snuffers, sugar tongs and such; about 1850 use for coinage and as plating for cutlery began; in 1885 the first nickel-steel armor plate is reported to have been produced; in the early 1900s so-called nickel silver was a major outlet.

Development on today's scale, however, is essentially a story of this century; and intertwined with it is that of modern industrial development — from the early automobile to the rockets of space.

The armament race leading up to the First World War was the first great market. Output of about 20,000,000 pounds at the start of the century tripled to 60,000,000 by 1914; reached a wartime peak of more than 100,000,000 pounds, and collapsed to less than 20,000,000 by 1921.

From then on peacetime uses were developed so successfully that the drop following the Second World War was handled with little disruption and production now is higher than ever. The 1961 free world consumption record of 505,000,000 pounds compared with the wartime peak of 340,000,000.

In 1905 Canada's production first passed that of France's New Caledonia, and since then Canada has been the world's leading supplier from the ores of Ontario's Sudbury area and, more recently, also from northern Manitoba.

In a foreword to Mr. Howard-White's book, Dr. John F. Thompson, former chief officer of International Nickel Company of Canada who has had a leading part in most of the nickel developments of this century, says:

TECHNICAL, TOO

"It brings back to me the atmosphere which surrounds the life of a great mining industry in much the same way that the odor of a burning sulphur match brings back to any mining man the days when he worked on the converters or blast furnaces."

For the student, chemist and metallurgist the book contains abundant formulae, graphs, charts, processes, flow sheets, maps, pictures, notes and appendices.

Mr. Howard-White was born in London in 1895 and combined science and law in his career. He is a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, and was awarded the Military Cross in the First World War while serving with the Royal Engineers. He joined what now is the United Kingdom arm of International Nickel Company of Canada in 1920 and retired from executive posts in 1961.

HISTORY in CAPSULE

PREHISTORY AND THE BEGINNINGS OF CIVILIZA-TION, by Jacquetta Hawkes and Sir Leonard Woolley (George Allen and Unwin Ltd.,

This massive 873-page report makes up the first printed volume of an ambitious literary printed first envisaged by a conference of ministers or education without place in London in 1943.

Nine years later, mainly through the permittence of Sultian Huxley, the International Commission for a History of the Scientific and Cultural Development of Mankind was established under the auspices of UNESCO and immediately undertook the underviable task of selecting historians to write the story of man annihis accomplishments. Those chosen then consulted scholars throughout the world and, with the cooperation of specialists in every field of human endeavor, set about the monumental task,

In all, more than 500 experts became directly associated with the project, and Volume One is the first, fruits of their combined labors.

And valuable fruit it is, for here for the first time is a comment but complete global history of manthind's earliest ages. It is not a story of hings, presidents and dictators, nor of politics and buties, but of the way in which people lived and developed their ways of life.

A glaince alone at the chapter headings will suffice to indicate the vast scope of the book. In Part One for instance, sections deal with the evolution of man, the history of the Palaeolithic and Mesolithic cukures and the development of the human mind and society.

In readable language easily followed by the average layman, the story develops into a discussion of the emergence of art and religion and the advancement of material culture as one century of man succeeds another.

Such intriguing subjetes as the first use of fire for cooking, the domestication of the dog, the development of tools and weapons, the early use of lamps and ornaments, and spinning and weaving in pre-history days are but a few of the myriad aspects of human advancement dealt with by the report.

Part Two takes the reader into the beginnings of civilization and discusses the Bronze Age, the urbanization of society, the social and economic structures, techniques used in arts and crafts and prehistoric man's first ventures into the field of communication.

The volume goes thoroughly into early languages and writing systems, the ancients' approach to the sciences and the progression of the fine and applied arts, music and literature up to the end of the thirteenth century B.C.

Generously illustrated and containing excellent maps, Prehistory should be a must at least in every high school and college library in hite country. It would also be a welcome and valuable addition to the family bookshelf. R.B.

As basis for this grim thesis, he uses a 1960 speech by that scientific humanist, Sir Charles Snow, which rocked the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Str Charles said about nuclear weapons: "We know, with the ourtainty of statistical truth, that if enough are made, some are going to blow up . . . through accident, or folly, or madness, but motives don't matter . . ."

As an added touch, the six disarmers include the "father" of the atomic bomb and a crew member of a plane that A-bombed Japan.

This blending of fact and fiction and the crispness of language and thought are features that help offset some of the book's poor points.

The Escalator is not great literature but it is great reading. And when you put it down, a few nagging questions a bout Sir Charles' warning to the world are bound to stay with you,

'Art' Movies Come to Victoria

Victoria's first, full-time, commercial "art" movie house owes its existence mainly to the tenacity of a dedicated theatre man who arrived in Victoria some 16 years ago.

The Fox Theatre, on Quadra near Hillside, changed its name to the Fox Cinema Sept. 2 and embarked on a policy of showing exclusively high-quality films, most of them from overseas.

It was, in a way, the fruition of years of many-hours-a-day a rid frequently heartbreaking and backbreaking toil for the man who began building the Fox in May, 1948, and owns it, H. A. Nixon, a veteran of 44 years in the entertainment business.

Mr. Nixon's chance for a virtual monopoly on commercial showing of "art" films in Victoria—a prerequisite, as he found out two years ago, for a quality movie house to be economically viable in Victoria—came, totally unheralded, in a phone call from the Patricia Bay Airport Aug. 17.

The deal was closed that day, after less than half an hour of negotiation.

The call came from two Toronto men, N. A. Taylor and Jack Bernstein, respectively president of the International Cinema Guild and 20th Century Theatres and general manager of International Films.

The three interlocking firms import 75 per cent of the quality foreign films that come into Canada and they have the bargaining power to get most of the other 25 per cent from the organizations which bring them into the country.

The firms also have a Canada-wide chain of movie houses which they either own or, as in the case of the Fox, have contracts with.

A few of the many theatres in the chain are the Towne and International Cinemas and the Little Cinema in Toronto, the Studio in Vancouver and twin-auditorium movie houses which are being built at shopping centres in Calgary and Edmonton.

Under the contract signed Aug. 17, the International Cinema Guild supplies the Fox with quality movies. Mr. Nixon retains decision over what will play at the theatre and has the right to get films from elsewhere.

New foreign films will play at the Fox during their first circuit across Canada, probably shortly after they have played in Toronto and immediately after Vancouver. In some cases, films will probably be playing in Victoria before they play anywhere in the United States.

First film to play under the new Fox policy is the British Peter Sellers comedy, "Wrong Arm of the Law."

Planned for this winter are festivals of all the movies made by the Swedish director Ingmar Bergman; Frederico Fellini, who directed "La Dolce Vita," and Sagyit Ray, the Indian who directed the "Pather Panchali" trilogy.

Mr. Nixon also expects to continue the theatre's two-year-old policy of an annual French-language film festival and to occasionally show feature films connected with the courses of study of local students.

The movie programs will be complete with carefully selected "shorts" and printed programs.

Except during film festivals of various types, each feature will be shown for a comparatively long time, ranging from a week to, in the case of especially popular films, 10 to 15

New foreign films will make their first appearance in Victoria at the Fox.

A native of the hamlet of Crossfield, Alta., Mr. Nixon began his career in the entertainment business some 44 years ago when he delivered handbills for a local movie house. His first job inside a movie theatre was in Banff, Alta.. in 1928.

He became used to hard work early and remembers the days when he worked in a mine all day and then apprenticed as a motion picture projectionist at night.

An incident typical of Mr. Nixon's bent for self-reliance and hard work occurred while he was taking a couple of years' leave of absence from the Capital Theatre in Lethbridge, Alta., to operate a family dry-cleaning business.

Changes in the operation of another firm suddenly cut off the plant's source of steam, and Mr. Nixon, who had had experience with boilers on the family farm in Crossfield, determined to instal a steam plant himself.

But he lacked the necessary boilermaker's licence. In only a few days' brutally concentrated study, he managed to pass the necessary exam, got his licence and went on to instal the holler.

It was from the Capital in Lethbridge that he came to Victoria.

Construction of the quonset-hut-like theatre, designed by Victoria architect J. H. Wade according to rigid acoustical and line-of-vision specifications laid down by Mr. Nixon, began in May of 1948.

Times got tough and he took a job in the shipyards, and for seven long years he worked there by day and ran his theatre by night until, several years ago, he was able to devote all his 'time to the Fox.

About four years ago the Fox made its first venture into specialties, with a number of films made from operas. Films connected with school courses and French-language films also have been shown at the Fox in the past several years.

About two years ago the Fox made its first attempt to show exclusively "art" films. And Mr. Nixon found out for sure that there is the potential audience in Victoria to make a foreign film movie house pay.

Sidney Welcomes New Industry

a day producing his compourds from the imported material, and establishing his markets. Already the plant boasts huge tanks, one of which holds 1,130 gallons of a liquid mixture which takes 24 hours to make, and is then ran off into storage tanks, from which it goes into barrels for the latter operator, or into handy gallon containers. At the moment his two other products are a jellied form of the seaweed which is a compist activator, and a granular soil conditioner.

He has complete confidence, now that science is turning increased more to the sea, that the railabilities of processed seaweed will speak successfully for themselves. And he is probably right. He started off with four commercial accounts, and now has 128. And instead of two non-existent mirroraids, he now has a sales force of 28 men working for him across the country — although this, he says, is just a drop in the bucket.

"Japan," he remarked, "has one million people employed in this business. That's a big difference. But give us time!"

He is delighted when pleased users of the new product get in touch with him. A farmer on holiday here from Saskatchewan ordered a couple of barrels sent back to the prairies, and later wrote that his wheat was two feet higher than anybody else's. The New Westminster Parks people are his loyal supporters. He has displays at the various flower shows throughout the provinces, and the results from these are building.

1915 Predecessor

His company, of course, isn't the first of its kind in Sidney. In 1915 several tons of kelp per day was being used in a good commercial product before the war closed the business down. But science has come a long way since then. One newly discovered attribute of seaweed is its astonishing ability to dissolve heavy clay into usable, arable soil. A successful experiment along these lines recently conducted by Professor Bonniksen and associate Dr. I. J. Cooke, in Essex, brought back areas in-which all gardening had come to a standatill.

When I drove out to Sidney to see the new plant, I was escorted by Mr. Woodford, ahead, in his own car. On the way we passed a fine garden display which my guide called to my attention by enthusiastic waves of his arm. I responded with my horn, letting him know that I understood and admired. Two minutes later a somewhat drab showing of wilted growth called forth from the window of the car ahead an emphatic wnward stabbing of thumb! I acknowledged this derogatory gesture with another tootle of my horn, at which the car behind complained with an imperious blast.

I gathered the rest of the Pat Bay Highway traffic was rather relieved when we turned off.

Outside the new factory is a tangle of blackberry bushes. We stopped beside these, and at once Martin Woodford strode into their midst and picked me a handful. They were without doubt the biggest and best I've seen.

"We dumped some of our waste on this lot," said Mr. Woodford modestly.

"Up from the sea and down to earth" is one of the product's slogans. And so, at long last, the humble algat the most ancient form of life known upon this planet, comes into its own.
